ONBOARDING

What to bring to SparkSocial

SparkSocial works from what you tell it about your brand. This is everything worth having to hand before you start, ordered by how much difference each item makes to what you get out. Nothing here is mandatory — but the first three sections change the result more than everything else combined.

> If you only prepare three things: the five routing answers, your call to action, and your logo. Between them they unlock more content formats than the rest of this list put together.

STEP 1

The five routing answers

Highest impact. These decide which content formats are available to you at all.

Answer these first. Get them wrong and SparkSocial plans a month of the wrong kind of work; leave them vague and you simply get fewer options.

Question	Choose from
What proves you are good at this?	a person · a product interface · physical craft · finished work · a physical product · data outcomes
What can you point a camera at?	your screen · your space · work artifacts · the product · nothing
What is the content for?	leads · bookings · trials · sales · audience · hiring
Any secondary goal?	any of the above, or none
Can someone be filmed?	yes, with permission to clone · yes, filmed only · no

The last one matters more than it looks: avatar and voice cloning stay switched off unless you confirm licensed permission, and that is deliberate.

STEP 2

Your call to action

The single highest-leverage field in the whole setup.

Fourteen of the thirty content formats read your call to action directly and word for word — SparkSocial will not invent one. Without it, those formats cannot be built, and your campaign will be visibly shorter.

- [ ] The exact line you want at the end of a post — “Book a survey”, “DM for prices”, “Get a quote”
- [ ] The destination it points at, if there is one

Bring the wording itself, not a description of it.

STEP 3

Who you are

- [ ] Business name, category and sub-category
- [ ] A one-liner — what you do, in a sentence
- [ ] Where you operate: global, national or local — and if local, the radius you serve

- [ ] The languages you publish in
- [ ] Price tier: budget, mid, premium or enterprise

Much of this can be drafted for you from your website address — you confirm or correct it rather than typing it from scratch.

STEP 4

How you sound

The part most brands under-prepare, and the biggest lever on quality.

- [ ] Where you sit on four axes: formal, playful, technical, bold
- [ ] Two to five things you actually believe about your field or how the work should be done
- [ ] Phrases you never use
- [ ] Anything you are required to say — disclaimers, regulatory wording
- [ ] Reading level, if it matters to you

> The point-of-view statements are what separate copy that sounds like you from copy that would suit any business in your category. Everything else on this list makes content possible. This is the item that makes it yours.

STEP 5

What you sell, and who to

- [ ] Your products or services: name, price, and the link each one points at
- [ ] Who you are talking to — one line per audience segment
- [ ] For each segment: what they are actually struggling with
- [ ] Where those people spend their time

STEP 6

Material you already have

Bring what exists. The library recognises nine kinds.

Kind	What it means
Brand kit	Logo, colours, fonts. A logo on its own unlocks six content formats, so it is the cheapest thing to bring.
Past posts	Anything you have published before that worked.
Product shots & screens	Photographs of the product, or screenshots of the interface.
Work artifacts	Evidence of the work itself — in progress or finished.
Physical capture	Footage or photos of your space, your team, the job being done.
Social proof	Reviews, testimonials, results you are allowed to quote.
Knowledge	PDFs, documents or pages describing what you do and how.
Talent likeness	Only where you hold written permission — see step 1.

Know the usage rights for each item. Anything unresolved is deliberately held back from publishing rather than risked, and SparkSocial will tell you what is blocked and why.

STEP 7

Accounts and access

- [ ] Login access to each social account you want connected, with permission to authorise an app
- [ ] Who on your team needs access, and at what level
- [ ] If you run brands for clients: which people should reach which client
- [ ] A phone number for the capture loop, if you plan to film on a phone

Which platforms are available depends on each platform's own approval process. SparkSocial shows you what is live on your account rather than implying more.

STEP 8

Decisions to make before you publish

Decision	Options
Approval posture	Publish unattended · review everything for the first week · review every post
Compliance profile	None · health · finance · legal · other regulated
Spending limits	A monthly ceiling, and per-category limits within it if you want them
Retention	Whether content should be removed automatically after a period
Sign-off rules	Whether publishing, or spending above an amount, needs a named person

STEP 9

If you want SparkSocial handling replies

- [ ] Which platforms to monitor for comments and messages
- [ ] How far it should go: watch only, suggest replies, or draft every reply
- [ ] Reply tone, and how much emoji is appropriate
- [ ] What must always go to a person instead — refunds, complaints, anything legal or medical

STEP 10

Each time you start a campaign

- [ ] What this campaign is for, and over how many days
- [ ] Which channels it should run on
- [ ] The destination link
- [ ] Any fixed dates you have committed to — a launch, an event, an offer ending

> Not ready with all of it? Start anyway. SparkSocial tells you what is missing, what it is costing you in content, and where to add it — rather than failing quietly later.
